Q: What is your personal mission statement?

A: "What you are not giving is what is lacking in any situation." I have a love/hate relationship with this quote because it means that I'm the one with work to do! It makes me accountable and responsible for my feelings, actions and reactions. Thoughts create feelings, not the other way around. Knowing that helps me drop defenses and make big perspective shifts. Not always easy, but I'm an eager work in progress.

Q: What were you like as a child?

A: I was a born entertainer and people pleaser, which has proven to be a helpful prerequisite in my industry. I used to round up the neighborhood kids, dress them in costumes, choreograph, direct and put on shows for the parents. I was five.

Q: How do you define success?

A: For me, success is finding joy, beauty and gratitude amidst the loss, growth and chaos. It's constantly conquering my fears and staying open to adventure — merging my passion with purpose and watching my daughter blossom as she does the same.

Q: What is on your bucket list?

A: To go gorilla trekking in Rwanda.

Q: What is your passion?

A: Philanthropy and activism are my biggest passions. Being the spokesperson for the Tahirih Justice Center, a board member of the L.A based Adopt-A-Center, supporting my 15-year-old daughter Kaya's #stillagirlcampaign which brings social media awareness to Child Marriage in the United States in her Teen Vogue article on the topic.
